Concealed in Boots
The term "bootleggers" comes from a practice of early sellers of illegal liquor, who often concealed it in the leg of a boot, according to the Encyclopedia Britannica.

DOROTHY DIX
'Adult Point of View'

Dear Miss Dix: For eight months I have been keeping company with a young man who at times is enthusiastic about our getting married and at other times is deeply pessimistic. Also, he speaks constantly of his past "conquests," referring to his old girl friends whose pictures and letters he carries around in his pockets.

I do not want to be narrow about this, nor am I jealous. But will you please help me to decide whether or not these petty things should disturb me, or if I should just take what he calls "an adult point of view" on the whole situation.

DETWIXT AND BETWEEN
Answer: If the "adult point of view" consists in engaged couples and husbands and wives turning a sympathetic eye on extra marital affairs of lovers and husbands and wives, few will be found to subscribe to such an altruistic doctrine. For love is monopolistic, and perhaps the only way a man or woman who really enjoyed watching a sweetheart or a husband or wife having a romantic affair with another.

Hence, when your fiancé constantly throws his past "conquests" at your feet he is not taking "an adult point of view" of the matter. He is showing how childish he is. He is acting like a little boy who has to brag about what a big red apple he has and being teacher's pet. The man who is a real lady-killer keeps away from his affairs. He kisses but never tells. When a man goes about with his pockets stuffed with the pictures of his old flames and the love letters that his girls have written him, it is a dead giveaway that he is a heartbreaker among the girls. He is a has-been, or a never-was.

Poor Bet
But all the same, a girl makes a poor bet when she marries a man who is always bragging about what a devil he is among the ladies. It is his taste, for one thing, and lies, for another thing, and for the balance no woman wants to spend her life listening to a husband recount his amours.

Dear Miss Dix: I am a girl of 21 and have been admiring a young man for the past two years without his ever having noticed me. I call him sometimes and talk to him and he is very friendly when he sees me, but he never calls me up or dates me.

Should I keep on trying to get this man, or just give up and be a quitter? I think any man worth having is certainly worth waiting for. What do you think about it?

ANCIOUS
Answer: It seems to me that you are following a very cold trail and that your chances of snaring the young man are so poor that you had just as well let it at a day and turn your attention to some more responsive youth.

Women and men play the love game differently and use a different technique. When a woman wants a man she chases him, and the more she chases him the faster he runs and less apt she is to ever catch him. But when a man is in love with a girl who is indifferent to him, he just camps down on her doorstep and is Johnny-on-the-spot who drives away all other suitors until, in the end, she generally marries him.

Dear Dorothy Dix: My wife insists that I have no right to open her letters, either business or social. I believe that I have that privilege. Of course, I do not expect her to open my letters nor does she want to do so. Which one of us is right?

ZZZZLED
Answer: Your wife is right. There is nothing more insulting than a husband can do than to open his wife's letters. It is a slap in the face that any decent woman resents. It violates her privacy and eliminates her independence. Somehow it takes away all of the pleasure and thrill of getting a letter for it to have been opened by someone else who has heard it, and commented on it, and discussed it with other friends or other members of the family and told all the news that was in it.

Of course, if a husband has no confidence in his wife and he opens her letters to see if she is having an affair with some other man, it is one thing. But it is another thing when the person to whom the letter was written is wise and trustworthy.

You say that you do not expect your wife to open your letters, neither does she want to. Don't you think your wife is as much entitled to her letters as you are to yours?

Flood Waters Cover Thousands of Acres

By the Associated Press
Flood waters covered thousands of acres of lowlands and cut high-way travel in parts of three mid-west states today.

Recent mild temperatures sent a flow of water into many streams in parts of Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri. The possibility of serious floods along the Big Missouri river arose with a Weather Bureau forecast of warmer weather in the north.

An estimated 15,000 acres of land were under water in southeast Nebraska as the Nehama river and several other small streams overflowed. The Missouri river was filtering through ice jams from Omaha south to just below Atchison, Kans. Several highways dated.

Several small streams in Iowa in southern Nebraska were under water over highways and side roads. Overflows from the Iowa river measured six inches deep in two places but traffic was not hindered.

State Highway 21 was blocked by water at Deep River, Ia. Thousands of acres in the Princeton, Mo., area were inundated yesterday when the Grand river overtopped its banks. The Missouri spread over its banks in parts of Montana near its headwaters and more serious flooding threatened. At Kansas City, Red Cross, army and federal agencies met yesterday and mapped plans for a possible flood emergency.

Moderately cold air spread over the North Central states today, but the U. S. Weather Bureau predicted warmer weather tomorrow.

Drunk Doctor Shoots It Out With Police

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 25 — (UP)—A prominent surgeon, holding his grandchild in his arms, "shot it out with police" in his suburban home here, until he was finally slain by a cornered officer.

Patrolman B. L. Buchanan said he refused to return the fire of Dr. Abijah C. Fields as long as the doctor was holding the 18-month-old child.

But when the doctor backed him into a corner and threatened his life, Buchanan said, he cut Fields down with bullets from his revolver. The 49-year-old surgeon was dead on arrival at a Birmingham hospital.

Officers Buchanan and C. D. Guy were called to the Fields home early today by the victim's father, Dr. E. T. Fields.

The elder Fields met the policemen at the door, told them his son was drunk and abusing members of his family, and escorted them to an upstairs room where the younger doctor was holding his grandchild.

The officers said Fields cursed them and Guy went back to the patrol car to call for assistance. Meanwhile, Buchanan said, Dr. Fields produced a pistol and fired at him three times.

Buchanan said he retreated "immediately." The doctor put down the child and followed the officer downstairs. Buchanan said Fields cornered him in the living room, waved the weapon and said "we'll shoot it out here."

The officer said he then drew his service revolver and fired five times, two of the bullets striking Fields where he stood in the doorway.

The official police version of the shooting described the doctor as "a police problem for the last 15 or more years." The report quoted the elder Fields as saying his son had recently returned from a narcotic hospital in Kentucky.
